THE GAZETTE.

FRIDAY MORNING, APRIL 8, 1859.

OFFICIAL IMPERTINENCE. The possession of a "little brief authority" is very apt to make men more or less arrogant, and more or less regardless of the rights of others. It is a tolerably well settled prin-ciple, for instance, that all men are entitled to a certain degree of polite treatment, so long as they behave themselves, and occasionally we meet men with sufficient hardihood to claim their rights in this regard when snubbed by short-tempered officials. This does not happen frequently however. A stranger wanders into some public place, say into the Capitol grounds, and ignorantly violates some rule. He walks on the grass, or he throws the stump of his cigar into a fish pond to see if the gold and silver fishes have learn-It is put up in bags and barrels. Particular ated the use of tobacco, and he is gruffly rebuked ed the use of tobacco, and he is gruffly rebuked tention is asked to the following analysis by Dr. by a surly officer. In nine cases out of ten the R. H. Stabler. culprit slinks away, like a well educated dog who has been told to "go out," and who un-derstands the order to be a threat of summa-ry ejectment. He embraces his tail with his hind legs and vanishes.

Official personages of low grade—that is to say, those who are in constant contact with the masses, are not often popular; and the reason is, because they are not often polite. It is not difficult to account for the repulsive demeanor of men, not particularly good-natured, who occupy a position that necessitates constant intercourse with a rude public. A man selling tickets through a narrow window in a railroad depot is addressed by a hundred different individuals in the course of an hour, and the travelling public is almost always in a hurry, excited, and unamiable. The public holds the ticket agent responsible for any defects in the arrangement of the depot—any impropriety in the hour of starting, and tacitly blames him for any unpleasantness in the weather. If the hackdriver has swindled the traveller in exacting an extra and unrighteous quarter, he is very apt to visit his indignation upon the head of the first railroad official he accosts. Some one tells the story of a man issuing from the door of a gambling hell, after losing all his money, (of course) and feeling decidedly unamiable in consequence. The first individual he sees is a man sitting on the curb-stone tying his shoe, and the unlneky sporting-man incontinently kicks him into the middle of the street. When asked by the sufferer to account for such outrageous treatment, he replied, "Confound you, you are always tying that shoe!" Any body can see the reasonableness of the assault, and the perfect aptness of the excuse offered. Another example of official rudeness may be found in the bank-clerk. He has dealings with two or three hundred persons during the day, and nine-tenths of them are surly and cross-grained. Ill nature is a bad disease and it is contagious, so the bank-clerk gets grumpy and stays so. He catches the disease, and he communicates it. When the good-natured tenth of the bank customers approach him, he gathers his brows into their accustomed frown, and gives very short answers to polite questions. He considers himself the natural enemy of all men who have business with his institution. Moreover, he is prone to fancy himself President, Cashier, the whole Board of Directors, and the principal owner of all the specie in the bank vaults, and as an indiscriminate public do not often recognize his multifarious claims to high consideration, he is "down on the public."--There are two classes of clerks that usually fall into this habit of over estimating their importance; the first one, those who have been in the institution for a long time, and the second are the youngest clerks, most recently appointed. As a general rule, Presidents and Cashiers and Tellers have more sense than to "put on" unnecessary airs, though we need not travel over twenty or thirty thousand miles to find examples of rudness even among

It never pays to be surly and disagreeable. No matter how great the provocation to an ill-natured retort, he who chokes it down and returns an amiable reply is always the victor. If an individual should really need "taking down," it is quite possible to say the most savage things with a smiling face and perfect suavity of demeanor. Perhaps this is a little more malignant than a rough speech, but it looks a great deal nicer. It is much the safer course to give the "soft answer" that "turneth away wrath," and leave the cross-grained brute to his own conscience, and to the comparison between his roughness and your kindlier manner. A man who is short and snappish with his equals, and harsh and overbearing to his inferiors (if he has any) will certainly be truckling and servile to superiors; while the polished gentleman is the same everywhere, always kind, polite and pleasant, and always popular. The official has certain duties to perform, and he swes it to his employers to do his work promptly and well; and he owes it to his employers, to society, and most of all, to himself, to do it without ill-humor and without impertinence. Ground and unground, in barrels, analysing over 60 per cent. Bone Phosphate of Lime. -Baltimore American.
